

Knitting or Candy Crush?

Can I knit and be addicted to Candy Crush?

The jury's still out. A friend (or at least she used to be a friend – haha) invited me to play Candy Crush Saga.

Candy Crush is the most addictive game I've played yet. Even worse than Spider Solitaire. That's all I need in my life; another distraction.

Candy Crush or knit?

Time is precious; contrary to what we might like, there really are only 24 hours in a day. And some of them have to be spent sleeping or at least pretending to sleep. That leaves only 16 or so hours left to knit, teach others how to knit, market Learn2Knit, be a mother to my adult children (yes, even adult children need a bit of mothering from time to time), be a daughter to my parents and a sister to my siblings and a friend to my friends. Phew. And then there are my volunteer commitments but let's not get into that now. Of course I knit while watching TV so I don't need to separate that out, but somehow I can't figure out how to knit and play Candy Crush at the same time.

Now's the time, people – time to speak up. Does anyone out there know how to play Candy Crush AND knit at the same time?
